HYDERABAD: The Union government will undertake “course correction” in the current education policy of the country and make changes to the previous models, if need be, to suit the needs of the modern world, human resource development minister Smriti Irani has said.
Participating in a symposium organised by Keshav Memorial Educational Society here on Sunday to commemorate 75 years of its establishment, she said that a national debate would be held across the country to bring about changes to the current framework of education and efforts would be made to elicit the views of academics in all respects.

Speaking on ‘Restructuring our education system with Bharateeya perspective of values’, she said that The National Policy on Education (NPE), being followed now, was formulated in 1986. To bring about a resurgence in India’s educational sector, the country needed a new education policy set in the context of 2014, she remarked.

According to her, the new education policy would factor in new aspirations and possibilities of the younger generation and would help the country fulfil the ‘Make in India’ dream voiced by prime minister Narendra Modi in his Independence Day speech.

Matrubhasha Divas: On the lines of Sanskrit Week previously held on August 7 and 13 across the country, all schools affiliated to CBSE will celebrate Matrubhasha Divas on February 21 next year to honour one’s mother tongue. She appealed to all schools across the country to be part of the initiative.

Celebrate Our Culture: The Union minister said that it is important for the younger generation to integrate one’s culture into their daily lives. “Today, young people read about international celebrities on the Internet. But they do not think about their own past glory and leaders who helped all of us to be one nation and bear one flag despite the differences. It is time we celebrate our culture,” Irani concluded.
Centre to initiate debate on ‘course correction’

Union Minister for Human Resource Development Smriti Zubin Irani has said a course correction of the country’s education policy is required to “make an India of made in India” possible.

As part of that, a debate will be initiated across the country soon on formulating the new education policy.

Ms. Irani said that last time, the national education policy was formulated in 1986, but for an India of new aspirations and possibilities in 2014, a new education policy was required to build a resurgent nation which would be stronger, resilient and humane.

State-wise and region-wise national debate will be initiated soon and the deliberations would study the ill-effects of the initiatives undertaken in the past and formulate the new education policy with a vision for the future, she stated.

Speaking at a symposium on ‘Restructuring of our education system with Bharatiya perspective of values’ as part of the platinum jubilee celebrations of Keshav Memorial...
Educational Society here on Sunday, the Union Minister said it was unfortunate that the present day youth, particularly students who Google international celebrities, did not recognise the nation’s intrinsic self and its legends.

There is a need to remember the nation’s past and to pay humble respect to those who laid down their lives to enable us to live under a one flag-one nation, Ms. Irani said.

She requested students to find some time and space in their busy schedule to respect the nation’s greats and celebrate their wisdom.

‘Matrubhasha Diwas’

Stating that the HRD Ministry had decided to celebrate ‘Matrubhasha Diwas’ (mother tongue day) on February 21 next year in all CBSE schools, Kendriya and Navodaya Vidyalayas, the Union Minister suggested that the institutes of higher learning also participate.

Director of SHAR, M.Y.S. Prasad, said that science could not be indifferent to values and ethics and all scientists and engineers should have certain fundamental values to help the society. Prof. Pradeep Kumar of IIT-Hyderabad, chairman of KMES, Justice L. Narasimha Reddy, and others spoke.
Hyderabad: The Union HRD minister Smriti Irani said that a new National Education Policy will be formulated soon.

The NEP being followed currently in the country was formulated in 1986 and modified in 1992.

Ms Irani was speaking at a symposium on “Restructuring Education with Bharateeya Perspective of Values” at the Keshav Memorial Institute of Technology here.

She said that the country needed a new NEP reflecting the aspirations of the country in this age.

“We need course correction. And for that we will initiate national debate, deliberations at the state, national and regional levels to find the ills of the past National Education Policy and formulate a new policy,” Ms Irani added.
“How much of the education that we are receiving today lets us reflect on life? Today, we can always find a teacher, but it is hard to find a guru,” she said, adding, “The country is steeped in legend but we don’t celebrate the legends of our country. I had called a meeting with the CBSE chairman and asked if we could have an essay competition on Pingali Venkaiah. Other officials didn’t know who he was.”

Officials added that the focus would be on skill development in the new NEP that would be formulated after the Cabinet expansion at the Centre.

“More focus will be on skill development. They are also planning a new ministry of skill development. The NEP will be finalised after that,” a senior AICTE official said.

Speaking at the symposium earlier, Hyderabad High Court judge, Justice L. Narasimha Reddy, said, "Historians like Max Muller were astonished to see the education system in India. From then, we have drifted to this unfortunate situation."

Director of Satish Dhawan Space Centre Dr M.Y.S. Prasad said, "Development in the space field was possible because of unselfish people. People should have the commitment that the result of their work should lead to the betterment of society."
Need course correction: Smriti

Hyderabad: Union Human Resource Development minister Smriti Irani said that there is a need for course correction in the education policy.

The union minister said the central government would initiate national debate and deliberations to formulate new education policy at a symposium on ‘Restructuring our education system with human values’ at Kesav Memorial Educational Society here on Sunday.

Irani said that back in 1986 national education policy was formulated. “Narendra Modi said if India has to be a resurgent nation, products have to be brands made in India. Then there is need for a new educational policy that would build a stronger nation,” she added.

“The new education policy would study all efforts of all the initiatives undertaken in the past, it would help to formulate a vision for the future,” Irani said.

She urged the experts from science and engineering, humanity backgrounds to help formulate new education policy to build a stronger and resilient nation.

Irani said that India is great grandmother of tradition, isn’t it silly that in present context teachers have to be trained when the country has produced great gurus?” she remarked.

“A teacher takes responsibility of the academic growth of a student, but a guru makes you responsible for your growth. A teacher answers to your question, but a guru questions your answer, thus helping you find new methodology,” she said.

She lamented that the country which has produced many legends like Aryabhata, doesn’t recognise its own intrinsic strengths.

The union minister appealed that February 21, 2015 should be celebrated as mother language day across the nation. She urged all schools and institutes of higher education to take part in the celebrations on February 21.

Quoting Mark Twain, Smriti said that India is cradle of human race, but how much of your education reflects on the human being in it. Narrating a real story of a doctor from a Bood district in Maharashtra who used to perform abortions for Rs 3,000 and never got caught by police, she said that doctor received his degree but he couldn’t get humanity.

Bandara Dattatraya MP, BJP national vice-president led Telangana State Upadhaya Sangsam president Sai Reddy submitted a memorandum to the union minister. They urged the minister to implement and fill up the post of 434 vacancies out of 475 MEOs and 44 vacancies out of 56 deputy MEOs, abolish contributory pension scheme and implement old system of pension scheme.

MYS Prasad, director, Satish Dhawan Space Centre, Sriharikota, Audhita Pradeep, Prof. R Pradeep Kattim, head, earth quake engineering research centre, IIIT-H, Justice L Narasimha Reddy, Judge HC, Hyderabad also spoke on the occasion.
